

Linguistic Structures

The following module assesses verbal abilities that are important for successfully dealing with linguistic structures and acquiring or improving language skills.

The tasks present expressions in invented foreign languages and their translations. From these, you can deduce the meaning of individual and grammatical rules of the foreign language. With the help of this information, you can answer the questions that follow. One or two tasks refer to a specific language. There are no exceptions to the rules (e.g. irregular verbs) and only those rules that can be deduced from the given expressions apply.

Example:

koloa = I lie

kolOe = he lay

satoe = he stands

"I stood" means in the foreign language:

- (A) satoa
- (B) kolOa
- (C) satoe
- (D) satOa

Answer (D) is correct because:

I. The expressions for "I lie" and "he lay" differ only in the last two letters; thus "kol" must be the word stem of the verb "lie".

II. The expressions for "he lay" and "he stands" both have "e" as their last letter; consequently, an appended "e" means "he".

III. The two present tense forms ("I lie" and "he stands") both have "o" as their penultimate letter; thus "O" in the penultimate position must indicate the past tense and an "a" in the last position must mean "I".

From this follows: "I stood" must mean "satOa" in the foreign language.
